FOOD QUALITY

Quality is a word we often hear when talking about food, particularly when the product is found in the market or on the table.

Yet the basic concept of quality can be hard to define, especially when we lack knowledge of the strides taken by science and technology in the field of food and nutrition in the last two centuries.

In the dark years of the world wars, mankind was engaged in more vital questions; however, quite soon after World War II, the WHO sanctioned a statement of universal validity: "Health does not refer only to the absence of illness but includes also complete physical, social and mental welfare.

This sounded not only like the heralding of a new era but looked like a precept to conform with in defining priorities and the rules of intervention, e.g. FQ assessment.

Today, the territories we are moving into are becoming even larger so that FQ defined only in terms of salubrity and safety is not enough. As well as this opening of western counties toward new civilisations, consumers are manifesting a new awareness of the influence of food on mood, efficiency at work, and life-style, thus, producing novel compromises between hedonistic needs, dietary needs and safety guarantees.

Market globalisation is determining a new awareness among the experts, bringing with it the tendency to refer to FQ as total food quality (TFQ).

The best way to define this new concept would be to group and classify the basic factors comprising TFQ. In conclusion, TFQ is a partly objective concept; we are assessing properties like nutritional quality, safety of use, shelf-life, etc., which are not strictly related to the human senses.

In any case, definition and appraisal of TFQ standards are not only bound to the raw materials employed but also to technological processing and gastronomic preparations.

But also a partly subjective concept; the consumer is the main instrument of appraisal of the sensory properties of the product, immediately perceived by the human senses

OUR COMPANY

Since the establishment of Siena Foods in1992, the company has maintained a strong passion for sourcing and delivering the best quality food products to meet the daily requirements of food lovers across many cultures, in all corners of the world.

Founders, Dominic and Melina Mercuri (the Mercuri family) place an emphasis on personnel development, product development and food innovation which has provided the foundations for the long term growth of the business.

In addition, Siena Foods has now proudly forged a faithful network of world - leading producers and manufacturers to create a portfolio of value - for - money, premium products across countless categories.

The Mercuri family has a very close association with their home country, Italy. This is where the family inherited their love of food and food production processes. In order to maintain this special connection and to remain at the forefront of product development and distribution, the Mercuri family has established facilities in Italy to further assist in identifying new food trends and importantly provide an administrative and logistical base to service the northern hemisphere.

Siena continues to seek trading partners across the globe whom have the same desire and passion to meet the growing demands of food lovers in their part of the world.

Because at Siena Foods,

We put flavor in your kitchen

BALSAMIC VINEGAR

Traditional Italian Balsamic Vinegar of Modena is a thick, sweet-smelling vinegar made from a reduction of cooked grape must.

The resulting syrup is then aged in wooden barrels that imparts character to the vinegar.

White Balsamic Vinegar Condiment is made from a white grape must, blended with wine vinegar then cooked at a lower temperature to avoid any darkening.

The flavours of the two are very similar, although the traditional balsamic is slightly sweeter and tends to be a little more syrupy.

LUPINIS

Lupini beans are a healthy, delicious snack that can be eaten all year round as an appetizer or as a part of a cheese board.

They are particularly useful in vegetarian diets as a rich source of protein (second only to soy beans)

In addition they are high in fibre and a rich source of vitamin K and C as well as potassium and manganese.

In their natural state lupinis must be soaked for 24 hours to remove alkaloids but Siena lupinis are supplied ready to eat.

ITALIAN PARMA & SPANISH PROSCIUTTO

Prosciutto di Parma is the gold standard of Italian prosciutto.

Produced only in the Italian province of Parma whose regional idiosyncrasies make it possible to produce the highest quality hams using only four ingredients; specially-bred and fed Italian pigs, sea salt, air and the most important ingredient - time.

Every leg of Prosciutto di Parma is 100 percent natural, with no additives or preservatives.

It's easily traceable through all states of production and protected by the Instituto Parma Qualita (IPQ)

Every leg is identifies by it's famous logo, the Ducal Crown, the final branding and last step in the identification process that not only guarantees the highest quality and authenticity but leaves the "signature" of each operator.

B-WELL APPLE CIDER VINEGAR

Apple Cider Vinegar has long been recognised - not just for cooking - but as a home remedy.

Unfiltered apple cider vinegar contains a substance called “the mother” - strands of proteins, enzymes and friendly bacteria - that many people believe offer significant health benefits.

Studies also suggest that cider vinegar can be effective in reducing type 2 diabetes by reducing fasting blood sugar and improving insulin function.

East meets West for a Culinary Masterpiece !

At Siena Foods, our culinary roots are grounded in the traditions of Italy, but we're passionate about exploring and celebrating the rich variety of global cuisines.

Among the many vibrant culinary traditions we admire, the diverse flavors found across Asian cuisines hold a special place. Whether it's the bold spices of a Thai curry, the refreshing crunch of a Vietnamese salad, or the savory depth of a Chinese stir-fry, the region offers an incredible range of tastes and textures.

With Regal Thai's premium selection of ingredients, bringing these authentic, mouth-watering flavors into your kitchen has never been easier.
